Survey: More young women than men put high value on high-paying careers

Chicago Tribune

How would Don Draper feel about this?

A recent Pew Research Center study has found that young women are placing more value on a high-paying career than young men. But while climbing that ladder, young women also are striving for a happy marriage and children.

The results are based on a variety of questions from surveys conducted in January 2010 and December 2011 that asked "respondents to weigh the importance of key aspects in life," the Pew Research report said.

According to Pew Research's findings, more women ages 18-34 value a high-paying career than young men, 66 percent to 59 percent. This number for women is up 10 percent from 1997, and up 1 percent for young men. For women ages 35-64, 42 percent say being successful in a high-paying career is "one of the most important things" or "very important," compared with 43 percent of their male counterparts. In 1997, only 26 percent of middle-age and older women felt this way, compared with 41 percent of men.

Still, women lag in compensation. In 2010, full-time or salaried female workers had median weekly pay of $669, compared with $824 for their male counterparts. In 1979, women were paid an average of 62 percent of men's wages. That gap narrowed to 80 to 81 percent in 2004. By 2010, females age 16-34 received more than 90 percent of wages for men in the same age range, but women ages 35-64 got 80 percent or less of men's compensation.

But women still want a happy marriage and family to go along with a successful career.

"The share of women ages 18 to 34 who say that having a successful marriage is one of the most important things in their lives has risen 9 percentage points since 1997, from 28 percent to 37 percent," the report said.

The percentage of men in that range who prioritize marriage has dropped to 29 percent in 2010 and 2011 from 35 percent in 1997. In 1997, the share of young men and women who listed marriage as "one of their highest priorities" was statistically equal, but 29 percent of young men and 37 percent of young women now want this.

GETTY

Only one-third of women ages 18-34 are married, compared with 73 percent of women in this age range in 1960. The median age for first marriage is 27 for women now, compared with 20 in 1960, and the median age for firsttime mothers is 24 today, up from 22 in 1960.

"While marriage and family still remain among women's top priorities, many are delaying these milestones when compared with earlier generations," the report said.

'Latino' is only part of the story

Garcia

Can you guess my ethnicity?

Go ahead and cheat: Take a look at my picture next to this column. My name also should serve as a clue. My mom is fair-skinned and originally from central Mexico. while my dad is a dark-skinned native Texan. I grew up on the border of two countries and speak both English and Spanish.

So I'll ask again: What am I? If you said Latina, you'd be mostly right. If you said Hispanic, you'd be mostly wrong. These are two terms that have been used to describe someone of my ethnicity in an interchangeable manner for as long as I can remember. Both are as similar as they are different, depending on whom you ask. And if you ask me, I prefer Here's the deeper question: Are those labels outdated?

Latina.

According to the results of a recent Pew Research Center study of native and foreignborn Latinos—here defined as people who trace their roots to Spanish-speaking countries - 51 percent said they most often identify themselves by their family's country of origin. Only 24 percent said they prefer pan-ethnic labels such as Latino or Hispanic. In addition, 69 percent also went on to say that all Latinos living in the U.S. have various different cultures rather than a common culture.

And why wouldn't we? Even though the Spanish language is the primary foundation that unites Latinos, we're all from different countries and thus different cultures that should each be individually represented. You don't see the English speakers in Ireland firing up their barbecues for the Fourth of July, do vou?

I'll use myself as an example—a U.S.born woman with a culturally Mexican background and childhood who now has the lifestyle and POV of a liberal American. Growing up the way I did allowed me to be equal parts Mexican and American, so I've always identified with both. When I'm not describing myself as Latina, I'll say I'm Mexican-American. My culture is a significant part of who I am and how I see myself not just as a minority in the U.S., but on a day-to-day basis.

I've definitely used the terms "Latino" and "Hispanic" in the past when trying to group together anyone of Spanish or Latin American descent. Accepting the term or in lieu of it-has let me participate in national organizations and won me scholarships. So there are certain advantages to accepting either word

But the thing is, neither one is really a "one size fits all" label for the country's biggest minority group. While I won't exactly be offended if someone assumes I'm Mexican, I have friends and co-workers who are discouraged to claim their status as Latino or Hispanic because it often leads people to assume the same of them, when they're actually from Cuba or Ecuador.

I can't say that both Latinos and non-Latinos will stop using these terms anytime soon or even that they should. The labels are helpful tools, but it's important to remember how significant national and cultural pride is for all Latinos.

You might have made assumptions about my ethnicity at the beginning of this column. All I ask is that you do the opposite of that: Assume nothing about Latinos and where their families are from. Instead, ask questions. The answers you get probably will surprise you. DANIELA GARCIA IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. GETTY IMAGES PHOTO

Chicaco Friday 4841 Seriously ...

The accused killer of three relatives of Jennifer Hudson is set to go on trial Monday

Not quite. But one Billy Goat Tavern is shutting down

Chicago Tribune

The Billy Goat Tavern, planning to leave one of its Loop locations because of a rent hike, has gotten inquiries from five prospective landlords offering a new home, owner Sam Sianis said Thursday.

The tavern at 309 W. Washington St., one of seven Billy Goat locations in Chicago, is near the Civic Opera House, en route to the train stations. Sianis said his landlord wanted a monthly rent increase of nearly $10,000, and he'll close May 1 rather than pay.

"There was no way I could do that," Sianis told the Tribune, discussing a rent hike he said would have gone from $6,500 a month to $16,000. "The store over there is only [open] five days. Saturday and Sunday, no.

"I was there for 30 years."

Jonathan Zimmerman, of leasing agent Willard Jones Real Estate, said Sianis' monthto-month lease was handled directly with a management company. That company could not be reached for comment.

Naf Naf Grill, a Mediterranean-themed restaurant, is moving into the space, ZimmerNUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE FILE man said. This will be Naf Naf's first restaurant in Chicago, joining nearby locations in Niles, Naperville and Aurora.

Sianis said three of the five prospective sites he got calls about Thursday were for locations farther north - inside and outside the Loop another in Greektown to the south and one near the current Washington Street site.

The Washington Street Billy Goat is one of 10 locations listed on the company's website, including the "Original Billy Goat" at 430 N. Michigan Ave. While not where it was originally located, Sianis' family considers it the relocated version of the original, opened in 1934 by his uncle William near the site of the current United Center.

The Michigan Avenue location, downstairs from the Wrigley Building and Tribune Tower, is the one made famous in John Belushi's "Olympia Restaurant" bit on "Saturday Night Live" more than 30 years ago ("cheezborger, cheezborger; no fries, cheeps!").

As for the displaced Billy Goat, does Sianis think he'll take any of the potential landlords up on their offer?

"I don't know," he said with a laugh. "I'm going to have to look."

If we don't deal with this problem right now, it will just get worse."

Loop reroutes start Friday on 'L' tracks

Chicago Tribune

Trains on the CTA Orange and Pink lines will be rerouted along the Loop elevated tracks late Friday night, marking the start of a $39 million track replacement project that will run mostly on weekends for seven months, transit officials said Thursday.

Track closures are scheduled to begin Saturday morning along the Wells Street and Van Buren Street sections of the elevated structure. Normal train service will resume before Monday's morning rush period, officials said.

From about 9 p.m. Friday until approximately 1:45 a.m. Saturday, Orange and Pink Line trains will be rerouted from the inner tracks of the Loop to operate on the outer tracks, and travel counterclockwise. Riders will need to board and exit trains from the Brown Line side, or outer Loop track, of the platform during these times, officials said.

Upon entering the Loop, Orange Line trains will make their first stop at Adams/ Wabash. Pink Line trains will make their first stop at Washington/Wells.

From about 4 a.m. Saturday through 4 a.m. Monday, the inner and outer elevated tracks along Wells and Van Buren will be closed. All trains serving the Loop will operate along the Wabash and Lake sections of track.

Brown and Orange Line trains will operate as one route between Kimball and Midway Airport in both directions along the Lake and Wabash elevated tracks in the Loop, officials said.

Brown Line trains traveling south toward the Loop will operate on the inner Loop track as Orange Line trains from the Merchandise Mart to Midway. Northbound Orange Line trains to the Loop will run on the outer Loop track as Brown Line trains from Roosevelt Road to Kimball.

Pink Line trains will operate between 54th/ Cermak and Roosevelt. Trains traveling eastbound to the Loop will use the inner Loop BY THE NUMBERS

A neighborhood greeter service covering Boystown, Wrigleyville and Lakeview is set to launch May 26 at the Center on Halsted. CHICAGO OFFICE OF TOURISM AND CULTURE PHOTO

LAKEVIEW

Hi. Welcome to the gayborhood

By Tony Peregrin

FOR REDEYE

Rocket-shaped rainbow pylons mark the bustling, vibrant epicenter of Boystown, but somewhere just over the rainbow, there are many boutiques, novelty stores, restaurants and bars that some visitors to Chicago might easily miss—until now.

A new outpost of the neighborhood InstaGreeter program—a free visitor service offered by the Chicago Office of Tourism and Culture—launches May 26 at the Center on Halsted. Featuring one-hour guided walks led by what the COTC calls "knowledgeable locals," the tours cover Boystown, as well as Lakeview and Wrigleyville.

"The great thing about the Chicago Greeter program is that the walks are not scripted," said Kathy Law, who manages the tours. "Lakeview/Wrigleyville/Boystown is a multifaceted neighborhood with lots for guests to experience. It could be Halsted Street, with its retail, restaurants and bars, or it could be Wrigley Field for sport enthusiasts, or a greeter could choose to explore the neighborhood to show guests how we live, and highlight residential architecture."

Launched four years ago, there are four neighborhood InstaGreeter programs organized for the summer of 2012: Hyde Park, Old Town, Pilsen and Lakeview/Wrigleyville/

Boystown. Each location is open 11 a.m.-3 p.m. alternating Saturdays from May 26 through Oct. 6.

And as the name "InstaGreeter" suggests, no pre-registration is required, as tours are given on the spot, on a first-come, first-served basis

Unlike some other urban tours, these walkalongs are not composed of a gaggle of tourists gamely following in the wake of a greeter. Instead, group size is limited to six or fewer to encourage interactivity between the greeter and guests.

Most of the greeters who will be working out of the Center on Halsted already are a part of the volunteer program, such as Mike Chapter, a COTC InstaGreeter for nearly two years.

"I think one of the best reasons to take an InstaGreeter tour is to get the insider info from a local who lives in the neighborhood," Chapter said. "Visitors want to know specifics about which bars are popular on certain nights, which have special events, or where to go for a certain type of crowd or music."

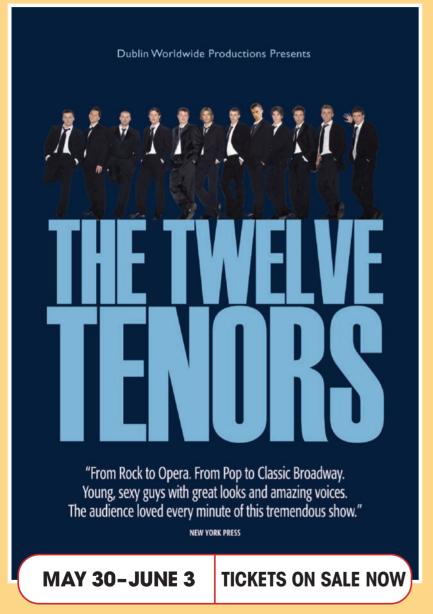

Chapter said sometimes it's difficult to get that kind of information from a website, and he plans to highlight specific boutiques and resale shops that make for interesting browsing, as well as some the area's hidden-gem restaurants.

NEW YORK Want some crushed bugs with your Starbucks frappuccino?

Well, you'd better get on it, because soon it will be too late. The coffee franchise announced that it's phasing out the use of insects as food coloring in its drinks and food Starbucks President Cliff Burrows wrote in a Thursday blog post that Starbucks is "transitioning" away from the use of an insect called the cochineal.

Burrows said use of the insect dye will be "fully transitioned from existing product inventories" by the end of June.

From that point on, he said Starbucks will use lycopene, a tomato-based extract.

WHAT IS AFFECTED?

Starbucks President Cliff Burrows identified the products in question as the strawberries & creme frappuccino, strawberry banana smoothie, raspberry swirl cake, birthday cake pop, mini-doughnut with pink icing and red velvet whoopie pie.

No weapons, no clothes, big problem

John Brennan says he did not go to the Portland International Airport intending to get naked.

But after feeling harassed by airport screeners Tuesday, the 50-year-old Portland, Ore., man stripped off his clothes in a protest that brought him even more attention from airport authorities, national headlines and a short stint in jail.

"I just took off my clothes and said, 'See, I don't have any explosives,' " Brennan told CNN on Wednesday. "The individuals at TSA are just doing their job and the whole organization needs to find a balance between safety and privacy. They use fear and intimidation and it's got to stop somewhere."

Brennan is no stranger to naked protest, as he has participated in a nude bike ride in Portland, he said.

"I am aware that's a tool I can use for free speech," he said. "I know that as an Oregonian and as a citizen, one of my ways of expressing myself is being naked. It gets people's attention."

MODERN INTELLIGENCE FOR A MEAN ECONOMY

April 21-28: The 11th annual Money Smart Week, featuring more than 500 free classes, seminars and activities about all things fiscal, kicks off Saturday in the Chicago area.

Haven't filed your taxes yet?

Megan Crepeau » redeye@ tribune.com So, haven't gotten around to filing those taxes yet, huh? How does it feel to be a lazy deadbeat who hates

Just kidding. No shaming here. I have good news. Let's start with that:

America?

Good news thing No. 1: Illinois automatically grants everyone a six-month deadline extension for state returns. (The deadline was Tuesday, by the way.) If you send in your state taxes by Oct. 17, you won't get hit with a late fee.

Good news thing No. 2: If you don't owe any money—for example, if you're expecting a tax return—guess what the penalty is for late filing? There isn't one. God bless America! Your only punishment is missing out on whatever you're owed, and knowing how dumb you are for dragging your heels on it. (I lied. I'm going to shame you if you pass up free money. Come on.) Of course, you won't know until you've filed whether you owe any money. You can do your best to guess, but at the end of the day nothing is guaranteed.

Good news thing No. 3: I'm guessing you're not an IRS top priority. If you're a big-time, tax-evading corporate shark, you're probably not reading this column. (Confidential to big-time tax-evading corporate sharks: 'sup?)

Does all that give you the strength to remember your fifth-grade math and file the damn return? Good. Here's the bad news.

If you owe the feds money and you don't file on time, they're going to hit you three ways. You're responsible for: a) interest on what you owe, b) a late payment penalty amounting to .05 percent of your return for every month and partial month your tax is late, and c) a "failure to file" penalty, which is another 4.5 percent of your total owed for each month past deadline.

I told you it was bad news. But still: better late than never. Suck it up, calculate your penalty payments and make Uncle Sam proud.

One final note. I am not a tax professional or a legal adviser. All this info is available at irs.gov and tax.illinois.gov/. So if you get audited, don't sue me. Just go pay your taxes, OK?

Industry: Advertising (account management)

Neighborhood: Gold Coast

What's your dream job? Hmm apart from being an advertising account executive? I'd have to say the next Ellen DeGeneres or Erin Andrews (with no scandals and a bias toward Philly sports teams. Sorry, Hawks fans!)

Relevant experience: I was brought on to Newell Rubbermaid, a CPG company, for a rotational program in brand management. I worked there for a year and a half right out of college. Eventually I decided to leave the "client side" in favor of becoming an account executive.

What's your top tip for living cheaply in Chicago? Invest in a good pair of walking shoes. Attend as many summer street festivals as possible. Read the RedEye and Time Out Chicago. Need I say Groupon and LivingSocial?

Tell us about your most bizarre Chicago experience: I used to drive the company minivan (aka "corporate shuttle") for all commuters from the city to the 'burbs. Just don't call me "soccer mom."

Craziest interview so far?: I was recently on a three-hour interview with six back-to-backs in one room. We kept to a pretty tight schedule, so when one of my interviewers didn't show up, I panicked. Was this a test? Where's Ashton Kutcher? Turns out the guy had to go out of town last minute for a client meeting. While HR was super sweet and was super sweet and extremely apologetic, I did not get the job offer.

Blackhawks lose second straight at United Center, face elimination

GAME 5 Blackhawks vs. Phoenix 9 p.m. Saturday, CSN

Coyotes lead

series 3-1

2012 Stanley Cup playoffs

Two days after the hit heard 'round the world, missing men Marian Hossa and Raffi Torres still were the talk of the town before Game 4 between the Blackhawks and Phoenix at the United Center.

That quickly changed. Promising 19-year-old rookie Brandon Saad was thrust into the lineup with Hossa out and Brandon Bollig dropped the gloves and fought it out with vet Paul Bissonnette five minutes into the game, bringing the focus back to the matter at hand for the Blackhawks: Staying alive and getting revenge. Could they do it?

FIRST PERIOD

- » Niklas Hjalmarsson saves a sure goal off a rebound when he pokes the puck away from a Coyote-in-waiting on the open side of the net.
- » A Brandon Bollig-Paul Bissonnette fight was fairly uneventful until Bollig pulled his foe's jersey all the way off, revealing it was strapped to his pants. That's a game misconduct, and Bissonnette was out of the game. SCORE: O-O.

SECOND PERIOD

- »Corey Crawford makes a blocker stop on Ray Whitney on a breakaway just a minute into the period. That was close.
- » Michael Frolik gives the Blackhawks their best scoring chance of the game on a breakaway of his own with about 12;30 left, but Coyotes goalie Mike Smith doesn't crack. SCORE: O-O.

THIRD PERIOD

- » Johnny Oduya has the puck stolen from him on the Blackhawks side of the ice by Shane Doan, who eventually puts a rebound back in past Crawford. Just 43 seconds later, Taylor Pyatt scores to put Phoenix up 2-0.
- » Seldom-used Brendan Morrison launches a shot from the faceoff dot, and it finds its way over Smith's glove to give the Hawks hope.
- » Frolik taps in a rebound with just more than a minute left to tie the game and send it to overtime—again. SCORE: O-O.

OVERTIME

There's a hero, all right. Mikkel Boedker scores to win it for the Coyotes.

FINAL: Phoenix 3, Blackhawks 2.

Feeling the Heat Miami beats Bulls to tighten playoff race

MIAMI There was trash talk. There were flagrant fouls and double technicals. There even was an

But it's just another game, right, Tom Thibodeau and Erik Spoelstra?

The Bulls and Heat staged another intense, feisty and physical affair Thursday night at American Airlines Arena. When it ended, the Heat—who lost James Jones to ejection and sat Chris Bosh and Ronny Turiaf-escaped with an 83-72 victory that sends the Eastern Conference playoff race into deeper suspense.

Although wouldn't it be nice if the conference finals began this weekend and these teams staged their rematch now, given the dislike that bubbled over? It's on—for good and forever—with these Despite sitting out some of the fourth quarter with cramps, LeBron James had 27 points and 11 rebounds for the Heat, who closed to 11/2 games behind the Bulls for the East's top seed.

John Lucas III's 16 points led the Bulls.

With the season series now tied at 2-2, the Heat can capture the top seed if they win their remaining four games and the Bulls lose one of their two remaining conference games against Indiana and Cleveland.

If the Heat win out and the Bulls lose only Saturday to Dallas, the first two tiebreakers would be tied, and the next tiebreaker is record against East playoff teams. With the eighth seed up for grabs, the Heat would win that tiebreaker if Philadelphia makes the playoffs. The Bulls would be No. 1 if Milwaukee squeaks in.

Rose returning soon?

While Luol Deng returned from missing two games with bruised ribs, Bulls coach Tom Thibodeau said Derrick Rose remains day to day with his right foot injury. A safe guess is Rose will return for the final two regular-season games next week.

"He's feeling a lot better, but he's still not quite there," Thibodeau said. "We're just going to be patient. And when he's ready to go, he'll go.'

T.O. checking in with Dr. Phil

Terrell Owens doesn't have much going on in his football career, so he has time to appear on Dr. Phil's TV show, where he will apparently talk with three of the four mothers of his children, larrybrownsports.com reported. The episode will air May 1. Catch it ...

Dwight drama gets really ugly

The friction between Orlando Magic center Dwight Howard and coach Stan Van Gundy has reached a new level. Howard reportedly has told Orlando owner Rich DeVos he won't play in another game under Van Gundy this season. And Howard was right: He'll undergo back surgery on Friday, sidelining him for several months.

Hits keep coming— except for Cubs, Sox

SACKED AGAIN

Difficult to watch.

The thuggery. The brutality. The careerthreatening injuries.

And that's just the NBA. How about that NHL?

Here's a secret: There's only one reason any team, in any sport, would resort to violence. It's because they can't get it done on talent alone.

So long Raffi Torres, hopefully forever. You make Dino Ciccarelli look like a choir boy.

And so long, fun NHL. This is not the league of Rocket Richard. This is the league of the Hansen brothers.

As for the mighty (?) Blackhawks, I fear it's over. After being roughed up by Phoenix, my favorite Hawk, Marian Hossa, is hurt, and badly. And for what? Being a great skater and scoring goals. Pitiful. I said when this started they're either the Stanley Cup winners or a first-round TKO. I'm thinking the latter.

The Bulls also have the look of an early out. I'm sick of this headline: Rose and Deng out

All right, even if they're back by the playoffs, these guys need a week or two of playing together to get their "rhythm" and "spacing."

More bad news about Derrick Rose. And this is the "mental aspect." I fear ... he may not have it—and by "it," I mean that Michael Jordan thing. Not the talent; that's unfair to judge. I'm talking about the instinct. The attitude that says "I will cut out your insides and have them for dinner if that's what it takes to win."

Life's not fair, Derrick. It's a lot of pressure playing here, your hometown. And you have the gift. So as Sean told Will in "Good Will Hunting": "No. You were born with it. So don't cop out behind 'I didn't ask for this.'

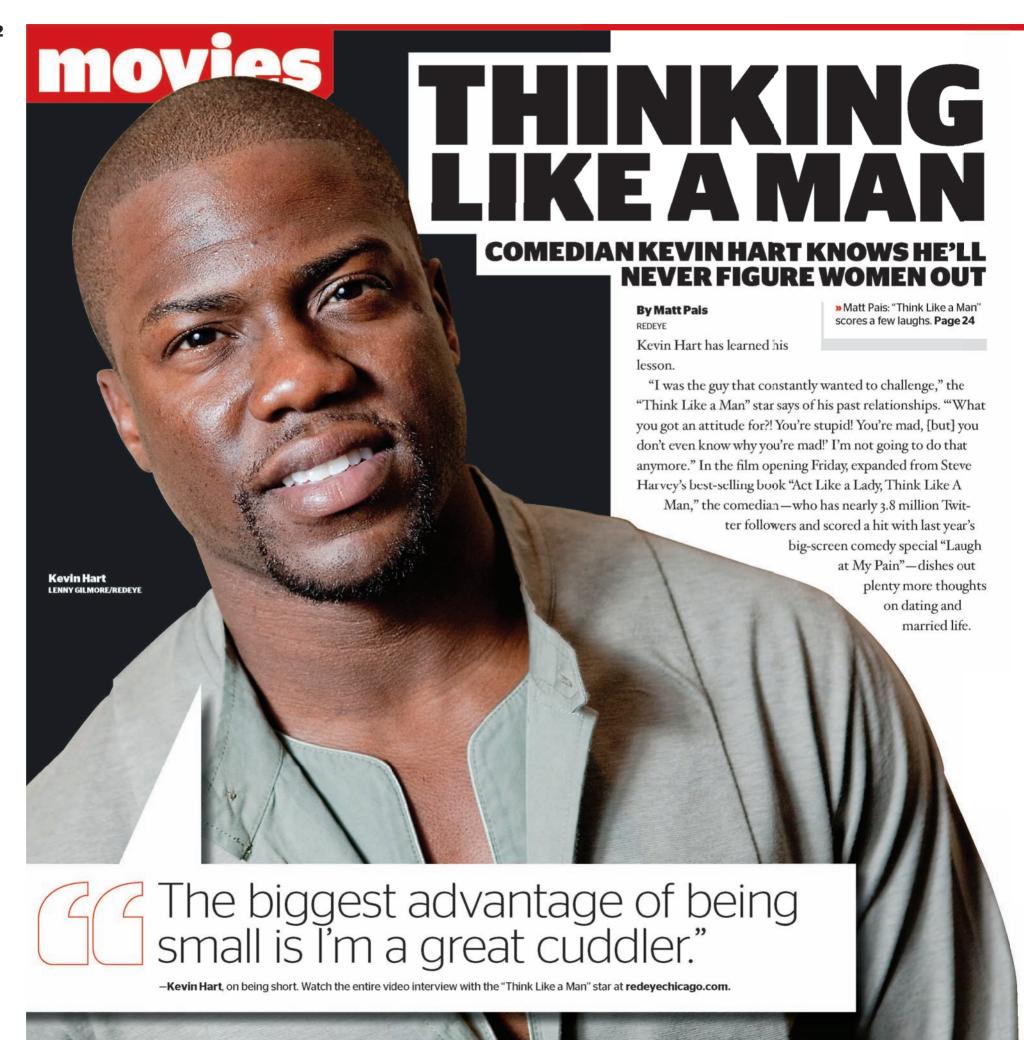

You're a superstar, Derrick. That's why you get to buy the condo in Trump Tower that I can only window-shop for. Deal with it quickly. The ship is sinking.

I'm afraid I can't watch the young White Sox, either. Too young, too up-and-down, too many strikeouts.

That leaves the Cubs.

Um, anything else on?

BAG BOY IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Hart plays Cedric, the "happily divorced" member of a group of friends (including Romany Malco and Jerry Ferrara of "Entourage") who discover that their women (including Meagan Good, Gabrielle Union and Taraji P. Henson) are using Harvey's tips about men against them.

At the W Chicago Lakeshore, the 33-yearold actor talked about what men will never understand about women and vice-versa, the films and whether men are dogs.

It's interesting that the movie's based on a book giving women guidelines about men, since most would agree women are much more complicated than we are. What would you want in a guidebook about women?

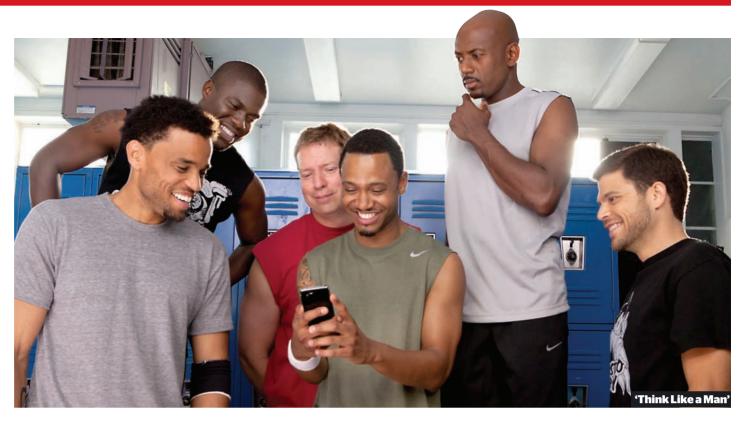

Here's the thing about the complications of women. We can tackle it two ways. [Laughs.] You can either want to figure it out, or you can just understand that you're never going to figure it out. [Laughs.] That's where I am. You say that you're married; I don't know what makes your household go better. But I do know that in my current relationship when there's attitudes and there's depressions or mood swings, I used to be the guy, "What's wrong? How can we fix it? What can I do?" There's nothing you can do! There's nothing you can do to make it better. It's a woman in their own realm. It's what they do; it's what they go through. Sometimes you just gotta learn to take a little step back and say, "Hey, do what you do. I don't want to battle." That's where I come from with it. I've tried to be the other guy. I'm currently divorced, so for me being the other guy was a completely different ballgame for me.

Aside from those situations of conflict, is there anything else about women you think guys will never understand?

It's hard to understand a woman's false sense of reality at times. And the reason why I say a false sense of reality—women want a lot. Their needs are really needs. As men, we don't need that much. It doesn't take much to make us happy. A sandwich and a TV and a couch, that's kinda heaven. We don't really want much. But a woman requires so much time. "Not only time, but we want to talk. Not only do we want to talk, we want to know what you think about what we talked about." There's so much, and it's hard for women to understand why men don't want the same thing or can't do the same thing to the level that they want you to do it.

Is that what women most frequently misunderstand about men?

Of course. Because they take it as [if] we don't care. That gets misconstrued for, "You don't care! You don't love me!" It's the button that's pushed automatically. "That's not true, I just don't want to talk right now." And that is where problems I think

He Hart(s) Chicago

Comic Kevin Hart, who appears in "Think Like a Man" opening Friday and "The Five-Year Engagement" next week, said he expects to do a Chicago arena performance in September or October. So we thought we'd ask him what he thinks about Chicago.

"Cold. Not being able to get out the airport when it's time to go home. Snow. Slush. Ice," he said. "[It's not that I'm a] warm weather fan, I'm just against Chicago's weather. There's cold, and then there's Chicago cold."

In fact, he has some advice for Steve Harvey when he moves to Chicago: "Dress warm. Trenchcoat. Scarf. [Laughs.] No dress shoes here. Thick socks."

escalate and where things tend to get blown out of proportion when taken from small things like that. Like I said, that's a different sense of reality. The reality is, men aren't as emotional and open as women are. It's just the nature of a man. So you do have a certain amount of men that can be that way at times but as men in general, we're really not that person. And it's very difficult for women to understand that.

True or false: Men are dogs.

I'm going to go with true. The reason why is because a dog wants to see everything, wants to do everything. Wants to have his nose in whatever he can have his nose in—until he learns not to put his nose there by getting popped or by getting beat or learning a lesson from sticking his nose somewhere where it shouldn't be.

How often do you get smacked in the face with the newspaper?

I've been smacked quite a few times. This day and age I've learned from my past smackins. I'm not smacked as much. But I definitely at one point in my life had my nose everywhere. I wanted to see; I wanted to know. I was curious. That's what dogs are. It's not that they're bad; they're curious. They want to know what this is and what happens if they go over there or get on that or go see what that is. That's what men do! We're curious.

Being divorced, what was it like for you to play a happily divorced guy, and what is the most appropriate way to celebrate a divorce?

[Laughs.] For me, being divorced, A) the happiest thing about divorce is when it's finalized. That's the happiest thing. Going through my divorce, it got ugly for a period, and playing this guy Cedric in the film actually gave me an opportunity to take the energy that I had when I was going through my divorce and put it to use. Everything in life happens for a reason. I went through my divorce at a perfect time, and I wind up playing a divorced man. And me doing that, I had so much that I was able to add to my character, which made my character real. You believed him. You believed that he went through the things that he went through and was going through the things that he was going through. You take my process away, I probably wouldn't be able to pull off some of the stuff that I pulled off in there. But as far as celebrating when it was over, I don't really think it was a celebration for me. It was more of just, [sighs], just like, "That monkey's off my back; I can now relax."

You didn't, like Cedric, round up your boys and rent a party bus?

No, no no no. My boys actually didn't care. They were like, "So what? Welcome to the club." [Laughs.] "This not a daggone celebration. We in the same boat, man. Move on. Enjoy life." So we didn't do too much.

You're in Jennifer Hudson's video for the song "Think Like a Man." How do you stack up against Ne-Yo, and how would you set yourself apart from him if, like in the video, you were both competing for a woman?

Well, first of all, I'm much more attractive than Ne-Yo. I tell him that all the time. Second of all, I'm a better dancer. Ne-Yo only has three moves. You can literally Google this and you'll see the same three moves. And I tell him that all the time, too. So basically I'm probably more of a catch to a female and that's why they wanted me in the video. For sex appeal, to bring more women to the project.

Why are you keeping your sexuality and your musical abilities and dancing to yourself?

You have to make choices. At the end of the day, there's two roads to go down. There's the comedic road for me, and there's the road of modeling and sex symbol type work. For me I want people to know me. I don't want to be looked at for just my body and my face. There's so much more to me, so that's why I chose the road of acting. Here's the thing, if that ever goes south and I can't do it, I'll always have modeling to fall back on.

Matt Pais

» mpais @tribune.com After seeing these stereotypes on screen approximately 100 billion times, everyone should be tired of movies that position men as immature, commitment-phobic slackers who need to shape up and women as uptight, long-term planners exasperated with the deception of the opposite sex.

Modern relationship insight? No, that's a weak stand-up routine from 25 years ago.

Extrapolated from Steve Harvey's book, "Act Like a Lady, Think Like a Man: What Men Really Think About Love, Relationships, Intimacy and Commitment," this intermittently funny comedy treats Harvey's book like a fountain of wisdom—so much so that characters frequently begin sentences with, "Steve says."

The women, including Meagan Good, Taraji P. Henson, Gabrielle Union and Regina Hall, use it as a guide to understanding their guys. The men, including Romany Malco, Michael Ealy, Terrence J and Jerry Ferrara, seek to use this leaked info against the girls.

Those are just a few of many discomforting elements of "Think Like a Man." Male/female relationships unfold as a constant power struggle, and the guys instinctively choose lying over truth every time. Watching while someone waits to see if he gets caught in a lie slows down this two-hour ensemble piece that runs at least 20 minutes too long.

As the divorced guy looking to celebrate his freedom, Kevin Hart scores some of the film's biggest laughs, in addition to a few hysterical digs at the broad comedy/sentimentality mix of Tyler Perry's films.

Even if "Think Like a Man" undergoes a similarly rocky transition between homophobic jokes and lines like "This bitch is crazy" before arriving at the honest point that, when the macho bravado falls away, these guys admit that they do what they do for their women because they want to, not because they have to.

Too often, though, the movie's peddling generalized gender roles and racial behavior as universal fact, in the white-guys-are-dorky-and-powerful-women-are-too-strong-and-intimidating department. The film's one aspect no one will disagree with, however, comes from the casting of Chris Brown as a sleazy, insincere dude whom women should avoid at all costs. If he thinks that's having fun with his persona, the joke's on him.

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

The anecdote-filled documentary "Marley" runs nearly two and a half hours. Perhaps that's so if any viewers inhale their support for the late reggae legend before the movie and pass out during, the thing will still be running when they wake up.

Fortunately, director Kevin Macdonald ("The Eagle," "The Last King of Scotland") spreads good stories throughout the informative, overlong film, which lingers extensively on Marley's youth and offers virtually nothing about his legacy and long-term impact on fans, the music industry or the world he aimed to unite. Macdonald leaves no stone unturned, from an interview with Marley's first teacher to his commitment to Rastafarianism (dreads and weed can and do have religious meaning) to his belief that problems will be problems, no matter who's elected.

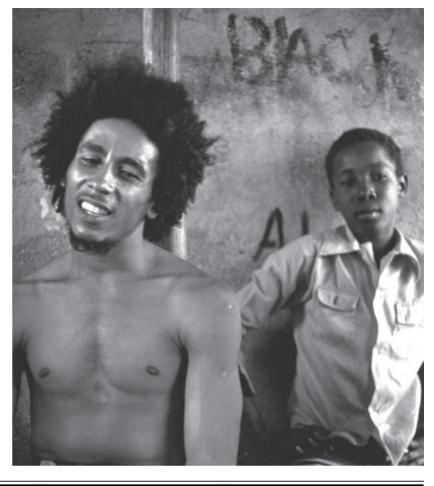

Actually, Macdonald does ignore some stones. The film notes that Marley and the Wailers long wanted an African-American fan base in the U.S.

without examining why his shows were so overwhelmingly white. Many people comment on Marley's process of writing lyrics but no one puts any emphasis on the music, which may only affirm viewers who claim all reggae songs sound like near-identical vamps. And with a production credit for Bob's son Ziggy, it's no surprise that "Marley" feels glossy in presenting its subject as a generous ball of charisma without really tapping into what kind of husband and father he was.

Regardless, "Marley" offers an informed perspective on the man behind the empowering music. He and his band performed in a cemetery at 2 a.m. to ensure that they wouldn't be afraid when stepping on stage, and Marley comes off as effortlessly honest even when his answer to everything seems to be a blandly life-affirming statement. Of course, he had reason to be grateful and humble; "Drink some water and go to bed," Marley was often told while growing up without food. A memory like that would make you thankful for any sense of security, no matter who's listening.

Regardless, 'Marley' offers an informed perspective on the man behind the empowering music."

'The Lucky One' finds romance amid trauma

Reuters

When it comes to romantic drama, Nicholas Sparks has the Midas touch. All of his books have been global best-sellers, and six of them, including "The Notebook" and "Nights in Rodanthe," have been turned into hit films.

Now Sparks' 2008 book "The Lucky One" has been given the Hollywood treatment, directed by Scott Hicks and with a cast that includes Zac Efron, Blythe Danner, Jay R. Ferguson and newcomer Taylor Schilling.

"The Lucky One," opening Friday, tells the story of a U.S. Marine who returns from his third tour of duty in Iraq, convinced that the one thing that kept him safe and alive was a photograph of a beautiful woman he found in the rubble of war.

Best known for playing upbeat characters, Efron, who first broke out as the star of Disney Channel's "High School Musical," knew playing a war-traumatized Marine named Logan "was going to be a stretch and a challenge. And I knew Scott would push me. And it was interesting to play someone who doesn't have to say as much as I do."

Efron, 24, said he researched his strong-and-silent role by "hanging out with real Marines and learning from them. I trained with them and bulked up, and when we began filming I started to really admire my character and the choices he makes."

Schilling, 28, plays Beth, a divorced single mother who runs a dog kennel with her grandmother Ellie. "She has a few more walls up than I do in my own life," the actress said. "But I connected with her almost immediately. I could relate to her."

Schilling and Efron in "The Lucky One"

Schilling also could relate to the story's themes of destiny and love. "I'm a believer," she said. "For me, there's some kind of a guiding force, and then there's also this piece of it that I'm responsible for—a dash of free will in there too."

Efron agreed. "Logan has the picture and the opportunity, but he still has to make the choice [to find Beth]."

Aspires only to be meh

Don't just assume "The Lucky One" is some schmaltzy, ordinary Nicholas Sparks ("The Notebook") adaptation. However, I can confirm that's exactly what the movie is.

While serving in the Marines, Logan (Zac Efron) picks up a picture on the ground and consequently avoids dying in an explosion. Back in the States, he tracks down Beth (Taylor Schilling), the unknown girl in the photo, with stunning ease, only to take a job assisting her at her kennel before he can confess why he walked from Colorado to Louisiana to find her. Naturally, Logan's a great, artistic guy who's happy to play father figure to Beth's son (Riley Thomas Stewart) but not so good to come clean before director Scott Hicks ("Shine") and writer Will Fetters ("Remember Me") treat us to some sensual lovemaking. Lovemaking that, of course, Beth initiates. Ever the gentleman, Logan has no complaints about passionate kissing and dry humping.

Efron deserves more credit for being an actor who can keep kindness from being dull. "The Lucky One," on the other hand, bores at almost every turn because of crushingly familiar characters and predictable decisions. Sparks' formula feels manipulative without some healthy doses of tension and unrequited love, but "Lucky" neither pulses with longing nor justifies putting a child in danger for emotional pull. Plus, considering Logan's honest intentions, it's hard not to imagine a different, more surprising movie in which the photo that saves him depicts a man, a building or a horse. If something, anything, saves your life, everyone deserves equal thanks, right?

Chimpanzee

Nothing articulates the persistence and struggle of life in the jungle more than a chimpanzee's use of a large rock, which inspires narrator Tim Allen to mention "power tools" and grunt like his "Home Improvement" character, Tim Taylor. Naturally, this gets a big rise out of the animals, who were all big Jonathan Taylor Thomas fans.

That's a joke, of course, as is the increasing trend of Disneynature films (the terrific "Earth," dull "Oceans" and decent "African Cats") to put words in the animals' mouths. Throughout "Chimpanzee," Allen notes history and motivations that these chimps would never know.

"This border has been a battleground for generations," Allen remarks about the turf war between the movie's friendly family led by Freddy and the rival group led by Scar. Scar, whose name presumedly was chosen by filmmakers in need of a villain, becomes the bad guy because, unlike Freddy, he doesn't roll with a cute baby chimp named Oscar. Only a person made of pure steel wouldn't grin at the sight of young Oscar's attempt to climb a tree, only to relent and return to his mother, Isha.

Among its fellow Disneynature movies. the 75-minute "Chimpanzee" offers the least stunning scenery—that's more than enough shots of the top of the trees, thanks—and only a few revealing moments that capture the animals thinking and learning. Otherwise, the movie seems mostly to exist as an opportunity to compare wildlife to human behavior, even if it means speculating about chimp families' internal pressures that never play out onscreen. The point of these movies should be to observe reality, not to shape reality into the equivalent of a cute animated movie. I'd be more interested in hearing chimps' thoughts on human behavior when they make a documentary about us.

'MI: Ghost Protocol' extras are first-rate

The action sequences in Tom Cruise's fourth "Mission: Impossible" film excite so enormously and consistently that it's easy to forget director Brad Bird actually had to conceive and execute all the tricks. But with the massive sandstorm and, you know, shots of Ethan Hunt (Cruise) dangling outside the tallest building in the world (the Burj Khalifa in Dubai), Bird's mission was, well, accomplished.

That's what makes the behind-the-scenes features—14 of them total—on the "Ghost Protocol" Blu-ray so riveting. The package, aside from the usual compliments thrown around between cast and crew, focuses on Bird's ambitious approach to his first live-action feature and the countless people and hours of preparation required to create something that takes up only a few minutes on screen.

In the movie, Cruise runs around like a madman. In these features, he comes off as a fearless actor dedicated to doing whatever he has to do to make the film as believable and fun as possible. Say what you want about him as a person, but you gotta respect that.

Other extras: Alternate opening, deleted scenes.

Shame

NC-17

Steve McQueen's moody, edgy drama "Shame" stars Michael Fassbender as a successful New York businessman who tries to compensate for the hollowness he feels inside by compulsively pursuing impersonal sexual encounters. "Shame" has been tagged as a movie about sex addiction, but that's not entirely apt. As the hero avoids all emotional entanglements—including the entreaties of his visiting sister, played by Carey Mulligan – "Shame" becomes less about sex and more about a deeply damaged person trying to lose himself in the anonymity of the city. The arc of misbehavior feels overly familiar from movies about alcoholism and drug abuse, but what elevates the material is McQueen's impressionistic approach to depicting a life of torturous need. Extras: Five featurettes. LOS ANGELES TIMES

Vote yes for 'Veep'

Vice President Selina Meyer is just a heartbeat away from the most powerful position in the world in HBO's cynical, hilarious and profane political satire "Veep." I hope that heart never stops beating.

As played by the wonderful Julia Louis-Dreyfus, Meyer would be a disaster as president.

And as funny as that might be, I want to see Louis-Dreyfus and creator Armando Iannucci ("The Thick of It," "In the Loop") mine Meyer's predicament as the least important politician in Washington for all it's worth.

"What have I been missing here?" Meyer asks a senator (Kate Burton) who she hopes will help her out of a tight spot in the first episode.

"Power," replies the senator, vaguely pretending to joke.

Meyer, viewers will quickly learn, wants to be a lot more important and respected than she is. She's not a complete idiot, but she is a bit ditzy, a lot self-involved and completely image-obsessed. She lacks most social graces and relies heavily on an inept group of aides who constantly screw up.

She and her team are such bumbling, cursing klutzes, the president won't even talk to them. "No," her executive assistant, Sue (Sufe Bradshaw), says every time Meyer asks if the president has called. And she asks a lot.

Like some of my favorite workplace comedies ("Better Off Ted." "Archer"), "Veep" relies on its supporting actors. Here they match Louis-Dreyfus in bringing the funny. Tony Hale plays Gary, who whispers info in Meyer's ear so she can talk to people she doesn't care to know. Chicago native Matt Walsh plays Mike, the press secretary who pretends to have a dog so he doesn't have to work late nights (his office mates call the imaginary mutt a "bull-shitsu"). Anna Chlumsky plays Amy, Meyer's chief of staff who has a hate/hate-even-more relationship with Dan, the cocky new deputy director of communications played by Reid Scott. Amy also spends a lot of time fending off the attention of arrogant White House aide Jonah (Timothy C. Simons).

Almost the entire team is on hand in the premiere when Meyer loses her dignity yet again at a fundraiser where she blows a speech so badly, she's forced to escape by doing her own version of the walk-and-talk made famous on "The West Wing."

"What we're gonna do is we're gonna walk slowly to the car, OK?" she tells her staff. "But you guys surround me, very purposeful. We're discussing important ..." She pauses, trying to think of the right word, "... things."

"Veep" doesn't add a lot to the political conversation or leave you with much to dwell on beyond how funny these actors are. Like the current political climate, it's pretty superficial. That's not a bad thing, though. I'm always up for an amusing sitcom, and this one gets my vote.

Kardashians koming to Schaumburg

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

The kraze has hit the Chicago area. Yes, that's kraze with a K—as in Kardashian kraze.

Sisters Kim and Khloe are set to make an appearance at 5 p.m. Friday at the Sears in Woodfield Mall in Schaumburg.

"Meeting fans is my favorite part of my job so I have literally been counting down the days for this," Khloe said on her website.

But before you fans rush off to the mall, make sure you read the fine print for rules of the meet-and-greet event.

First, fans need to have purchased an item from the Kardashian Kollection at Sears between April 15 and Friday, for any amount. You need to bring the merchandise and original receipt with you to get a place in line. You must have one receipt per person, so buying one item and trying to get a group of friends in line won't cut it.

The first 200 people in line to see the sisters will get the coveted wristbands and must stay in line; otherwise they may forfeit their wristband. Sears is going to be a stickler with the wristbands. No duplicating, transferring or giving the wristbands away.

The Kardashians won't sign any personal items. The lucky 200 fans will get an autographed photo of the girls. Get ready for the Kardashian khaos with screaming and shrieking fans.

Is it worth getting out of bed early for new offerings at Three Aces and Fritz Pastry?

FRITZ PASTRY

1408 W. Diversey Pkwy. 773-857-2989 Brunch times: 9 a.m.-2 p.m. Sunday

Fritz Pastry—and its near-famous French macarons—have been around for years, but new owners and a new chef have shaken it up since January. The Lincoln Park space has been revamped, with a brighter interior, chalkboard wall menu, small side patio, and since late March, new brunch service. Head baker James Gray is a Chicago native, but only recently returned from Pittsburgh where he ran a successful bakery. After slinging doughnuts and danish during the week, the team at Fritz fires up the stove for Sunday brunch, with a Saturday brunch to launch in the next few weeks. The small menu focuses on seasonal and local ingredients, with a number of vegan entrees and pastries.

Crowd surfing: Unlike trendier brunch spots with 45-minute waits, Fritz feels like anyone's neighborhood cafe, a place where a table of 20-something girls could grab a quick bite next to a grandfather leisurely reading the Sunday paper over a scone and cup of coffee. After ordering at the counter, you'll have your choice of a table, though the small dining room does make groups of more than four slightly unmanageable.

Menu pointers: While the veggie dishes may not initially appeal to a staunch carnivore, they're actually some of the better options. Vegetable hash ($8) binds together perfectly cooked carrots, zucchini and two types of potatoes with tofu instead of egg, and roasted red-pepper ketchup adds flavor without fat. The breakfast burrito ($9.50) with organic eggs, black beans, chorizo and queso fresco is the only option with meat, and while the quality of the eggs is commendable, the total package isn't anything you haven't tried before

Sweet stuff: In addition to brioche French toast with blueberries and pistachios ($9), there's also a stack of vegan cherry-chocolate pancakes ($8.50). Four dense, half-inch-thick flapjacks are nearly redeemed by tart cherries hidden within, but an overzealous smear of chocolate atop the whole pile only adds to the sticky heft. Instead, I'd go with a savory entree and choose a muffin or cookie from the pastry case for a sugar fix.

Bottom line: Vegetarians and Lincoln Park residents will want to give the new crew at Fritz a shot, especially for a low-key brunch with quality ingredients and no fuss. The basics, like great baked goods and Metropolis coffee, are there, and perhaps some of the brunch dishes will find their footing with a little time

HREE ACES

1321 W. Taylor St. 312-243-1577, Brunch times: 10:30 a.m.-4 p.m. Saturday-Sunday, changing to 11 a.m.-4 p.m. daily starting April 28

Former Fianco chef Matt Troost has been rocking the kitchen at this Little Italy spot since it opened in 2010, and generally, the volume has been turned all the way up. Three Aces is part bar, part restaurant, and all attitude, complete with an Elvis pinball machine and heavily tatted servers. But the new weekend brunch service, which rolled out March 17 and expands to weekdays later this month, feels like the kitchen's inner rock star has gone from jamming in his parent's garage to playing the hippest lounge in town.

Day drinking:

It'd be a shame not to begin the meal with Father Flanagan's Bloody Mary ($9), made with small-batch vodka, a noticeable splash of stout and enough skewered meat, cheese and pickles to tide you over until the food arrives. For an extra buck, the 7-ounce High Life beer back is a no-brainer. I also liked the Ginger Baby ($9), a play on a dark 'n' stormy that perks up dark rum and ginger beer with pineapple juice and a novel skewer of sliced banana.

Good eggs: You've had 'em fried, you've had 'em scrambled, but have you had them smoked? Troost pairs a slightly smoky egg with pork scrapple ($12), a breakfast meat that's traditionally formed like a loaf, then sliced and fried. His version is slightly crunchy on the outside and piping hot and savory on the inside.

> Sweet stuff: Rather than veering into sugar bomb territory, the sweets are surprisingly balanced. Cinnamon roll monkey bread ($8) pulls apart in individual puffs, making it easily shared, and stout glaze adds an almost chocolatey, spiced layer of flavor. Sourdough waffles ($10) with caramelized banana sauce come with a side of airy cinnamon whipped cream you'll want to lick off the plate.

Bottom line: This fresh, creative brunch menu would be at home at a high-end restaurant, and the fact that it's served at a neighborhood bar that pumps The Ramones makes it an even more delicious surprise. KATE BERNOT IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

25 1st date ideas — that aren't — drinks and dinner

The Date Report

Spring is in the air! Time to emerge from hibernation, singles—dating season has begun! But dinner and a movie or meeting for a drink is just so boring. Here are 25 date ideas that don't simply involve a restaurant, movie ticket or bar tab.

- 2. Volunteer—plant flowers with the parks department, donate blood or paint a school.
- 3. Play Scrabble at a coffee shop.
- 4. Go to a used bookstore and buy each other one book you think the person should read.
- 5. Take a hip-hop dance class.
- Have breakfast before work.

- 8. See a free outdoor concert.
- 9. Go to a book reading.
- 10. Go bowling—winner buys the beer.
- 11. Go for a hike and bird watch.
- 12. Go gallery hopping and talk about which paintings you'd buy if you were rich.

20. Play chess at one of those outdoor tables.

13. Fly a kite.

- 21. If you're going to eat dinner, do it progressively, with each course at a different restaurant.
- 22. Play hooky from work and have a picnic in the park.
- 23. Karaoke!
- 24. Go somewhere with interesting scenery and sketch—then ask strangers to vote on whose drawing is better. Winner buys the loser a drink.
- 25. Play miniature golf.

- 15. Be a tourist in your own city and visit a local attraction neither of you has ever been to.
- 16. Ride bikes.
- 17. Tackle a rock climbing wall.
- 18. Visit the planetarium or natural history museum.
- 19. Learn to cook something yummy at the local culinary school.

7. Get a psychic reading or have your tarot cards read. Discuss the accuracy—or lack thereof—as a starting point for getting to know each other.

It's just a hookup if ...

The Date Report

Are you two just hooking up, or is there something more going on? Here are seven signs.

It happens only while drunk

Maybe you hang out sober, but you certainly don't hook up unless some sort of alcohol is involved.

You never plan in advance

You'll randomly see each other at a party, or maybe text earlier in the day about plans that night.

You do only pre-hookup things

A drink? Sure. A picnic in the park? Not gonna happen with a hookup.

You don't call each other

You only text or email.

You rarely eat breakfast together

Hookups will get dressed in the morning, kiss one another on the cheek, and head out—MAYBE throw back a cup of coffee. If it's more than a hookup, one of you will usually suggest breakfast.

You don't go to parties together

Sure, you've been known to surreptitiously leave parties together, but you certainly don't arrive as a couple. You never make plans to grab a bite or a drink beforehand: that's date stuff

You don't text in between

After hooking up with a date or someone who is interested in you romantically, you can expect to get a follow-up email or text from them within the first day or so after hooking up. With a hookup, you won't hear anything until the next time you guys, well, hook up.

'Magic' touch

Los Angeles Times

When it comes to TV costumes as fashion inspiration, "Magic City," Mitch Glazer's new show set in 1959 in Miami Beach, has the potential to be the next "Mad Men" or "Boardwalk Empire."

The show, airing at 9 p.m. Fridays on Starz, centers on the glamorous Miramar Playa Hotel, where even the call girls dress to the nines. By day, it's cha-cha lessons and mah-jongg by the pool. By night, the Kennedys, the mob, the CIA and Frank Sinatra all hold court.

Costume designer Carol Ramsey talks about her favorite costumes created for the show.

The green gown Vera Evans (Olga Kurylenko) wears at the end of the first episode is my piece de resistance."

I also like the pink-and-black squiggle dress, with matching black gloves, belt and shoe worn by Lily."

Another favorite is this outrageous, low-cut sheath made out of silver metallic discs worn by Judi Silver (Elena Satine), who is a call girl. In those days, there were call girls who paid the hotels to rent stools at the bar. It was challenging to figure out what the hookers should look like. They weren't so overtly sexy back then and to the modern eye they wouldn't look like hookers. So we made most of her clothes lower-cut and tighter."

LIFE IMITATES STRIP

As we all well know by now, Channing Tatum was a stripper in his past life. But how did his wife, Jenna Dewan, react when he told her? "When she found out about it, one of the first things she did was make me give her a dance," he told the Sydney Mcrning Herald in 2010. Smart lady.

The countdown to Channing Tatum's 'Magic Mike' stripfest has begun

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Well, ladies and gentlemen, it's an important moment in American history. No, Jessica Simpson has not had her baby (yet). The trailer for "Magic Mike," aka The Channing Tatum Stripper Movie, was unleashed on the Internet on Thursday. While it's slightly less revealing than we'd hoped, this is a preview after all. We took on the daunting task of watching it approximately 34 times to break down this cinematic wonder by the numbers. You're welcome.

6/29

The movie's release date. Just in time to celebrate our nation's independence—and the independence of Joe Manganiello's pants from his body.

You don't want to know what Magic Mike has to do for this bill. Wait, but we do!

15-ish

Number of cheesy lines—but we're sure there are way more in the movie.

"You must be really good with your hands" and the classic "Wow, that's a lotta ones" take the cake.

Number of stripper motifs featured, including construction worker, fireman, cowboy and ... slutty hip-hop dancer? Something along those lines? Whatever, Channing Tatum is a fantastic dancer.

The age of Matthew McConaughey, the movie's elder stripper. After seeing him shirtless, you will be shocked by this number.

When You do the Math, You Choose McGrath!

That's how much Heineken reportedly is paying to be featured in "Skyfall," the new James Bond film, according to eonline.com. "We have relationships with a number of companies so that we can make this movie. The simple fact is that, without them, we couldn't do it," star Daniel Craig told moviefone.com.

Love nerds

When "Game of Thrones" star Richard Madden confirmed to RedEye on Thursday that he and new "Doctor Who" companion Jenna-Louise Coleman are indeed dating, we he had to ask if that meant he might use his connection to guest star on the worldwide hit. "Maybe! I'd love to be in 'Doctor Who.' It's one of my favorite shows. Hove that thing," he said. "I think I was more excited than she was

[when she won the role]. I was like, 'What?!' "

People already know what it looks like, and we also couldn't find a lens that was wide enough."

-Jason Segel, to huffingtonpost.com, on why his full-frontal nude scene was cut from "The Five-Year Engagement," which hits theaters next week. We'll just have to conjure up that image from "Forgetting Sarah Marshall."

Usher's other stage

OMG! Usher will join the cast of the off-Broadway interactive party-within-a-stage-production "Fuerza Bruta: Look Up," making a two-show cameo April 28, according to the show's website, fuerzabrutanyc.com. He'll play the lead "Running Man."

'Girls' fight!

Congratulations, America. If you've been complaining about the characters in HBO's new series "Girls," you've fallen directly into producer Judd Apatow's trap. "When we made it, we always knew that it was a show you should fight about," he told vulture.com. "So hopefully people will fight about it every week!"

See ya, Seth

There's a new ESPYs host in town. Former "Daily Show" correspondent Rob Riggle will take the helm for the July 11 sports awards. thr.com reports. "SNL" goon Seth Meyers did a hilarious job as MC for the past two years, so Riggle has a lot to live up to, including Meyers' classic 2010 line about how L.A. is "where sports and entertainment come together," which makes it "like a Kardashian sister's bedroom."
